Japanese and Chinese Forces
"On Toes," Anticipating Serious Encounter

Attempts of Other Powers for

SHANGHAI, Feb. 13, 10:40 p. m. — Hello, everybody!

Excuse me for bursting in sudden like, but here's the latest dispatch as I can pass it on to you.

By golly, they did it— Who? The "Japs," of course.

One thousand of them got across Woosung Creek late this afternoon. Right this minute they are pressing their way northward through the smoking ruins of Woosung Village.

Both sides of that creek for a mile inland from the river are shambles. Chinese and Japanese dead and dying are lying about in groups; mowed down by each others' machine guns. Chinese in blue and gray and the Japanese khaki clad are floating down the Woosung creek into the Wangpoo river.

The conflict continues with the Japanese pushing northward in a desperate effort to clean up the village and overcome the stubborn Chinese resistance.

The Japanese employed a smoke screen for the first time in their 130 days of hostilities with the Chinese from Manchuria to Shanghai. Japanese destroyers in the Wangpoo steamed up and down the river, past the shore defenses at the mouth of the Woosung Creek.

The Japanese on the south side of the creek also used gas projectors to hurl smoke bombs to the opposite shore while low-flying land and sea planes dropped containers of chemical smoke together with high explosives and incendiary bombs.

While the Japanese defenders grouped about the creek side in their river side trenches and dug-outs, Japanese field guns let down the heaviest bombardment yet seen.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 13, 3 p. m. — (INS) — Interim bursting of shells this afternoon kept both Chinese and Japanese forces on their toes in anticipation of a serious encounter soon.

Five Japanese airplanes began the day's activities by bombing the Chinese artillery positions in Chapel just beyond the north station.

These Chinese guns had been hammering out mighty volleys throughout the night in answer to the Japanese batteries in Hongkew Park.

Despite the individual attempts of American, British and French ministers to China to arrange a peace between Japanese and Chinese authorities, it became increasingly apparent that the Japanese general offensive would get under way soon.

While the Chinese hastily set up heavy defenses to the south of the International Settlement, in the vicinity of Lungwha and Nantao, in expectation of an attack there, foreign observers were wondering where the Japanese were going to land their reinforcements, expected today.

While a light snow fell this afternoon both Chinese and Japanese kept the muzzles of their guns hot. A few Japanese shells fell within the Chinese lines, while Chinese shells fell close to the Japanese landing party headquarters on North Szechuan Road.

Two new fires broke out half a mile away.

One large shell struck a tree and then lodged in a wall within the sector being guarded by the United States marine forces.

Palladino Man Held For Fatal Shooting

Alfonzo Palladino, 24 years old, of the Starkey Farms, near Morrisville, who accidentally shot and killed Vincent Tedesco, 19 years old, at that place on Thursday night, was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan at Morrisville yesterday and held without bail on a technical charge of manslaughter. Following the hearing he was taken to Bucks County Prison at Doylestown.

Palladino will be confined to prison to await the result of an inquest to be conducted by Dr. John J. Sweeney, Bucks county coroner.

Mercer County Physician Charles H. Mitchell held an autopsy on the body of Tedesco at Kemp's morgue, Trenton, yesterday. He found that a bullet from the .32 calibre revolver of Palladino entered the neck and punctured the arteries, causing an internal hemorrhage.

The body of the victim was later turned over to a Bristol undertaker, Tedesco, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Donato Tedesco, was employed with his father on the Starkey Farms.

WAR ZONE BULLETINS

Shanghai, Feb. 13—The decisive battle at Woosung began tonight, preceded by a heavy bombardment and a thick smoke screen from warships in the Yangtze and Wangpoo Rivers. The Japanese threw one thousand across the Woosung creek where they were held up for several days by Chinese machine gun fire. They crossed in cork pontoons.

While the Japanese bombardment reached a crescendo tonight, two more brigades of Japanese infantry, (about 10,000 men) were landed.

The cruiser Tokiwa steamed up the Wangpoo River to the Yangtze carrying life bouys indicating that night operations were to be carried on near the mouth of the Yangtze River as the Woosung attack proceeded.

SINO-JAPANESE CONFLICT IS FOURTH WHICH FLOYD GIBBONS HAS COVERED IN SPECTACULAR CAREER AS A WELL-KNOWN "HEAD-LINE" HUNTER

Henry Wales, Also A Famous War Correspondent, Tells of His Buddy's Life — Other Wars Which Gibbons Has "Covered" Include Mexico, France, Morocco

Following is the first of a series of stories giving the "high lights" of the colorful and interesting career of Floyd Gibbons, now "covering" the Sino-Japanese situation at Shanghai for the Courier and other clients of International News Service. The stories are written by Henry Wales, himself a famous war correspondent and a "buddy" of Gibbons for a great many years.

By Henry Wales
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Feb. 13—Floyd Gibbons is writing history in another war. His epic, graphic dispatches from China are thrilling millions of readers in America. Syndicated and copied abroad, they are giving the news of the Sino-Japanese struggles to millions more.

The Sino-Japanese clash is the fourth that Gibbons has covered. His first was in Mexico, during the Carranza-Villa operations; later, he was with Pershing's punitive force which thrust deep across the border in pursuit of the bandit's army.

Next came the great war when Gibbons was one of the fourteen accredited newspaper correspondents attached to G. R. Q. A. E. F., to General Pershing's staff directly. He covered operations of the Allied armies all along the front, Belgian, British, French and American, from the North Sea to Switzerland.

After that he covered the Rift war in Morocco, when the French joined the Spaniards in a determined drive on Abd-el-Krim's Moors.

Gibbons has paid a price for his military experience. His left eye was shot away, and his left arm was drilled twice by German machine-gun bullets in Belleau Wood, near Chateau Thierry, in June, 1918.

In Russia during the dread days immediately after the Red Revolution, he covered various fronts during the foreign intervention uprisings, when Judeitch, Kolchak, Denikin, and finally Wrangel, attempted to wrest back the country from the Bolsheviks.

Afterward in the terrible famine which swept over the Volga region and the Ukraine, he visited the scene of the scourge, witnessed the plight of the dying thousands. Then he made his way back, alone, to Moscow, straight across European Russia, to

The post anticipates a very active year, and plans have already been formulated for launching a building program, an intensive drive for new members, and a concerted effort to lift burdens of sick and needy comrades.

An appetizing supper was served. The commander desires a large attendance at the next regular meeting, Thursday, February 18th, at 7:30 o'clock, when several matters of importance will be discussed.

"IT'S ALL A DREAM"

Phoenix, Arizona, Feb. 13.—"It's all a dream! It's all a dream," murmured Ruth Judd, convicted of the "double trunk" murder, to her elderly parents, Rev. and Mrs. H. J. McKinnell, as they visited her today in her jail cell. Mrs. Judd, accused of killing Agnes Ann Lerol and Hedvig Samuelson, whose bodies were shipped in trunks to Los Angeles, and doomed to hang on the gallows by verdict of a jury, cannot understand she is to hang, her husband, Dr. W. C. Judd, explained.

"Ruth doesn't realize what it is all about," Dr. Judd said. "If she is sane she is the most collected and bravest person I have ever seen." Mrs. Judd's attorneys say they will advance ten good reasons and "maybe more" in their motion for a new trial. Judge Speakman on February 23rd formally will sentence Mrs. Judd to be hanged in state prison at Florence.

Trips to Nearby Washington Landmarks

By Edward W. Hoeker

Because of the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington, keen interest has been aroused in all manner of Washington landmarks. Southeastern Pennsylvania is fortunate in possessing so many of these landmarks, associated with the career of Washington in war and peace. Here is one of a series of twenty articles describing nearby places which are linked with the story of the Father of his country.

VI.—Headquarters at the Neshaminy Camp

Old York Road, the ancient highway from Philadelphia to New York, resounded to the tread of the Revolutionary army on more than one occasion. If the motorcar of today racing northward on Old York road will reduce speed just after crossing Little Neshaminy Creek, a half mile beyond Hartsville, Bucks County, a bronze tablet may be observed at the right upon the wall of an otherwise inconspicuous stone farmhouse. The tablet commemorates the occupancy of this house by General Washington while the army was encamped in the neighborhood, August 10 to 23, 1777.

Following the departure of the British army from New York, on board the fleet, in July, 1777, Washington had moved his army from New Jersey into Pennsylvania to protect Philadelphia, the capital of the new nation. After remaining at Falls of Schuylkill for a time without learning anything as to the whereabouts of the British, the Americans retraced their steps on Old York road and went into camp near the Little Neshaminy, to be in a position to advance quickly either toward New York or Philadelphia, as might be determined by the course of the foe.

"Cross Roads" was the name used in official orders and correspondence to designate the nearby settlement now Hartsville. A farmer named Holand lived in the house where Washington made his headquarters. In his financial accounts Washington noted the payment of 5 shillings to Mrs. Holand for the use of the house and the furniture in it.

Immediately opposite the house a whipping post was erected, for lashes upon the bare back were a favorite mode of punishment in the army, especially for deserters.

In this camp General Lafayette, just arrived from France, entered into active service in the American army. As he was only 20 years old, Washington was perplexed as to what to do with him. Congress having made Lafayette a major general. Soon Washington became much attached to the ardent young Frenchman, and assigned him to duty on the staff of the commander-in-chief. Lafayette lived with Washington in the headquarters house.

In his later life Lafayette treasured a painting of the Holand house. It remained in his family after his death and was exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, in 1893.

Count Pulaski, who came from Poland, also joined the American army about this time.

On August 22 Washington received word that the British fleet had appeared in Chesapeake Bay. The following morning the army broke camp, marched down Old York road through Philadelphia and on into Delaware, subsequently to face the British in the battle of Brandywine.

Approve Plans For Green Lane Roadway

An ordinance approving and establishing the lines, grades, drainage structures and all other structures appearing on the plans of the Department of Highways of Pennsylvania, showing proposed improvement of Green Lane was adopted at a special meeting of borough council held last night.

The ordinance was presented by Jacob C. Schmidt, chairman of the Street & Highway committee and after the first reading, the rules of council were suspended and the ordinance placed upon second and final reading.

It was explained by Borough Engineer John S. Roberts, Jr., that the roadway will be concrete and 18 feet in width. The borough's share of the cost of the portion within the borough will be about $8,000 and the entire project will be paid for jointly by state, borough and county. The road will take an almost direct route across the Stackhouse farm thus cutting out the sharp turns.

A DAY FOR LOVE

Somebody ought to do for St. Valentine's Day what Dickens did for Christmas with "Old Scrooge" in the Christmas Carol. Only a hard, avaricious character in fiction can shut his soul to the spirit of Christmas, but there are flesh and blood characters with so little sentiment in their make-up that to them, February 14 is responsible for a wanton waste of paper and red ink and exchange of silly love verses and insulting penny comics.

There is so little romance and affection in some so-called human beings that the red hearts on the valentines are symbolical of the martyrdom of a Roman priest rather than of the love for mankind of this patron saint of lovers.

Something vitally essential is lacking in the soul of that man or who can pass a store window filled with valentines without feeling an overpowering desire to flood the mails with them and engage again in that childhood adventure of placing anonymous creations in hearts, arrows and verses on "her" doorstep.

St. Valentine's martyrdom will not have been in vain as long as the annual exchange of valentines, even comic ones, continue and this anniversary brings a truce in lover's quarrels.

WATER POWER

Water is again turning the wheels of industry as it did in the day of the ancient water wheel. The last 10 years have seen the horsepower produced by flowing water virtually doubled. Last year alone the increase was 4½ per cent, or 681,000 horsepower.

While the Osage dam in central Missouri—a $30,000,000 project—was the largest hydro-electric plant completed last year recent water power development has chiefly centered on the East and West coasts, Pennsylvania and Maine leading on the Atlantic and Washington and California on the Pacific. These four states last year each increased by 25,000 their hydro-electrically produced horsepower.

In spite of the great progress during the last decade America's water power is still relatively undeveloped. Engineers estimate the undeveloped horsepower in the United States would supply the present needs of the world.

Water power has not been developed here to the extent that it has been in some other countries because of the vast area of the United States and the great distances separating the sources of this power from the large consuming centers. Heavy transmission costs and losses make it uneconomical to transport electric power long distances.

Development of water power in the United States will make another long stride forward when transmission methods are improved.

MODIFIED BILLOWS ON DRESS TO HONOR MARTHA WASHINGTON

Four-Poster Bed and Other Colonial Furniture Comes Into Own

(By International News Service) American fashion has gone Colonial. Designers have shunned the fashion capitals of the world to delve into the pages of history and the Colonial mode of George Washington's day for their inspirations.

Advance spring fashions in department stores reveal that even the omnipotent Paris influence has been effectively shunted by nation wide plans to observe the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth.

Fashions today are the fashions of his day. Milady's coat will be modeled on the straight, severe lines of the revolutionary leader's great coat. Her hat will be either tri-cornered or cocked as it was in Washington's Day. The ruffles and billows of Martha Washington's frocks, a bit modified, will adorn the dresses of today.

The four-poster bed and other Colonial pieces "come into their own" in rejuvenated designs. The newest in draperies is the sprightly colored printed chintz of the revolutionary period. Pocketbooks are gay in color and bedecked with filmy ruffles to match the fine lace kerchiefs.

Electric table lamps now are nothing more than the hammered bronze lanterns of the 1776 era. Tableware in pewter and copper, modeled along purely Colonial designs, follows suit. Architectural exteriors of newly-built homes will further intensify the newly-born Colonial mode and will be closely copied this year by those who seek the ultra.

Jewelry will be brilliant with gems but simple in pattern and style.

The world's beauticians are now studying the Colonial coiffures which new hats and frocks demand.

George Washington, the father of his country, has thus become the father of its fashions.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Steinberg, Mill street, were entertained on Sunday by relatives in Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ritter and children, 566 Swain street, spent Sunday in Norristown, with Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Sigafos.

that still unconquered mystery men call the desert.

Ted's eyes sought the far horizon. Nothing but purple mists and darkening sky. No sight of human life.

Adela was looking to the west. "I think I've found my stupid self at last," she said, "but we're miles west of where we should have struck the desert. That promontory over there, that far one looking a little like bird's head—I think that's Eagle Rock. It's ten miles from there to the ranch."

"And fifteen from here to the rock," Ted estimated. "Twenty-five miles for a tired horse. Why don't you ride in while it's cool and I can camp here until tomorrow. I hate to see you take the desert alone, yet the mare will guide you home, won't she?"

For a moment the girl sat in thought, then deliberately she swung out of the saddle and took off the cinch. "It's better for us to spend the night here."

"But you're uncle will be wild with anxiety."

"Of course he will. And I'll catch what the major once called 'merry old hell' tomorrow, but I haven't the heart to make the beast face twenty-five miles more. Besides, I don't want to leave you here."

"What could happen to me?" "Lots of terrible things. For one thing, anyone as dumb as I've turned out to be might not be able to find you in the morning. Besides, I'm tired."

"But—" "Ted, look around and gather some soft stuff to lie on, and stop talking. I've decided to compromise myself." She smiled like a wayward child. "What uncle will say tomorrow isn't part of today's troubles. Really, this sort of thing is good for him. It gives him something to think about besides El Coyote."

Slowly she pulled off her riding boots and gingerly rubbed her insteps, then looked up.

"There's a lot of lunch still in that saddlebag, Don Ted, and some spring water in the canteen."

Radcliffe laid on the ground what remained of the lunch, then sat beside her. He got out his cigarettes and divided them into two piles.

"When the last one is smoked we go to sleep."

With his knife he cut dry branches of chaparral and soon had a small fire blazing.

"Not that we need the heat," he commented, "but that is always the thing to do. Besides, I like the way it makes your eyes glisten."

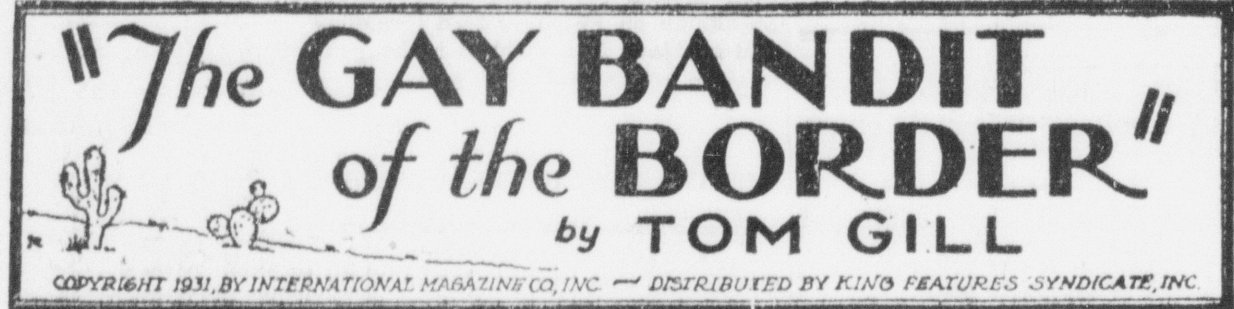

"These glistening eyes are going to be closed in sweet slumber before many cigarettes. I must be in sad condition to tire from a thirty-mile ride." She giggled her toes before the fire.

Ted went again to the horse and brought up the saddle-blanket. Adela sighed in contentment. "Not half bad, is it?" She yawned while the smoke from their cigarettes drifted toward the crackling flames. "Ever since I can remember I've wanted to get lost in the desert," she added.

"By yourself?"

"Dios, no. Always with some big, broad-shouldered man who would find me and put blankets over my feet. Thanks. I've spent many nights on the desert, out with the cattle hands, but I've never been lost. Sometimes, I remember, I would imagine myself lost, and then this unknown horseman would always come galloping over the sands and snatch me up into the saddle and take me home. And sometimes I would be lost and couldn't get home and would spend the night out here where the coyotes would come down and glare into the fire. That always gave me a delightfully goose-flesh feeling."

SYNOPSIS

Under the leadership of "El Coyote," the masked bandit, the Mexican ranchers plan to overthrow the wealthy Paco Morales, who has confiscated their property for years. All search for "El Coyote" has been in vain. Ted Radcliffe, a young American whose father Morales ruined, loves the Spaniard's beautiful niece, Adela. Jito, Morales' ward, is jealous. Bob Harkness, a friend of Ted's late father, urges Ted not to quarrel with Morales, as he has other plans. Following a raid on the village by Jito's vaqueros, one of his men is killed by Anton, an Indian. Morales, fearing the vengeance of the tribe, releases Anton. Out riding, Adela tells Ted she disapproves of her uncle's treatment of the peons. Ted considers Adela's wealth a barrier between them, but she tells him to let nothing interfere when he falls in love.

CHAPTER XXVI

Moening slowly, as if reluctant to break the spell, they followed the little stream up the slope to where it narrowed and at last lost itself among the firs. Adela stopped. She frowned at her watch.

"We're going to be later than the very devil, unless—" She swerved her horse, seized with a sudden thought. "Instead of following that winding trail, let's cut across here and pick it up north of the foothills. That will save us at least an hour."

Ted groaned. "If all the hours I've lost following shortcuts were placed end to end—" he began.

"I know. They'd reach back to the Ark. But after all we can't miss the desert, and we must save time. So don't be so solemn. Take that umbering horse out of my way and I'll show you some plain and fancy guiding."

"God help us all," was Ted's only comment, as he fell in behind.

It was hard going. The way led up the side of a cañon and at its top they followed a dim game trail over a grassy meadow and down again into a thicket of chaparral that tore at their riding breeches and pulled continually at their arms. It was a hot and breathless place, hemmed in by foothills. For an hour they rode in silence, then she stopped.

"I don't like the way this trail's leading," she told him.

Ted laughed outright. "Then you're hard to please. The trail's been leading so many ways that some of them should meet your approval." He pointed to a gnarled, lightning-shattered pine. "We've passed that monarch of the forest three times in the last half-hour."

"You're a shameless, barefaced liar, my boy. If you don't like my guiding, you try it."

"Not today. You guide this week and I'll try my hand at it next."

Without answering she turned her mare and, glancing at the western sun, laid a course due north. So a half-hour passed and at its end they stopped on the edge of a deep cañon. A narrow trail made by deer or cattle and washed by heavy rains led steeply downward. It was hardly more than a series of irregular rocky steps in the face of the cliff, and feebly they looked at the trail, then at each other.

Adela shook her head. "Not too good. But they're used to rough going, these horses, and, after all, we've got to get across. We'd better lead them down."

Ted dismounted. He looked down into the granite, shadowy depths of the cañon. He frowned at the trail. "I'll go first," he suggested.

From the start it was plain that the desert horses had no great liking for what must have seemed to them a very crazy proceeding. Ted's mare pulled abruptly back on the bridge, then stepped gingerly forward, sniffing at each step, shaking his head in disapproval.

"You'd better wait until I get clear," Ted called back. "There's no use in both getting stuck at the bottom of this ill-favored place."

She nodded and he caught a look of anxiety in her eyes.

Very carefully the man led on. At least the path was not slippery. He held the reins loosely, letting the horse choose his steps. Over half-way down, now, and the worst seemed already behind him. And perhaps they might safely have made that hazardous descent had not disaster chosen to place a loose rock in the horse's path. Ted heard the stumble and felt a sudden tug on the bridle. He turned in time to see the big roan's forefeet miss the path and plunge forward. The reins were torn from his hand, and in another instant the horse had crashed among the rocks and cactus beneath.

Frantically Ted scrambled down and reached the horse's side. One look at the legs and the man turned away, sick at heart. He reached into the saddle pocket and, pulling out the automatic, shot twice. As the sound of the shots rattled and echoed up the narrow cañon, he heard the girl running down the trail.

"There was no other way," he said. "It was a long fall."

"I know. I could see from above." Terror stood in her eyes. "It was my fault. Thank God it wasn't you." She bit her lip. "Let's go back up."

Ted took off the saddle and lifted it to a high rock, then followed the girl to the rim above.

"The horse is out of pain? Adela asked.

"He's quite dead."

"Poor old fellow." She walked a little way down the path and stood without a word gazing across the cañon. After a few moments she returned.

"And now about us. What are we going to do with one horse?"

"We can't be more than twenty miles from home," Ted estimated. "I can walk as fast as your mare until we get out on the plains, then you could gallop ahead and send a horse out for me. If I have to spend a night on the desert, that's no great hardship."

Adela shook her head. "It's not quite so simple. For one thing, I'm not sure we will get out of these foothills before dark, and we haven't crossed that cañon yet."

Ted slipped the automatic into his pocket. "At any rate, we'd better

AQUINAS FIVE WINS
OVER BRISTOL RAMBLERS

Aquinas basketball team defeated the Bristol Ramblers at St. Thomas Hall, Croydon, by the score of 44 to 27. The Aquinas outfit took the lead from the start and was never headed. At half time the Aquinas team led by 24 to 13. Aided by the sensational shooting of Gleason who scored 21 points and the excellent guarding of Coles, Tritschler and Moran, the Aquinas team outclassed the visitors. The wonderful blocking of shots by Coles and the passing of Bahr to put his team mates in position to score, were also outstanding features. J. Spadaccino did the best work for the visitors by scoring 11 points. The visitors had many opportunities to score which they failed to take advantage of.

The Aquinas reserves also defeated the Bristol Rambler reserves by the score of 29 to 7. Close guarding kept the score low and Barton did the best work for the home team.

Sino-Jap Conflict is Fourth
Covered by Gibbons

Turning to new fields, Gibbons burst into radio broadcasting. His "headline hunter" series became the most popular feature on the air.

He wrote two books, "The Red Knight of Germany" and "The Red Napoleon." Previously, when he was recuperating from the loss of his eye, he wrote "They Said We Wouldn't Fight." He has done several scenarios for the films. He made lecture tours. He appeared in vaudeville and he prepared and directed a series of motion pictures in which he appeared personally with such notables as General Pershing, Newton D. Baker, and General Harbord.

The end of September last, the first danger spark of trouble in the Far East flashed across the international sky. Japanese troops seized Mukden, took possession of the arsenal there, one of three in all China, and the largest and best equipped.

The International News Service obtained Gibbons' services. They put him under contract to go to the Orient and report the situation. They grabbed this veteran of three wars and a score of foreign revolutions, whose descriptive writings and utterances had enthralled the American public for a score of years.

Gibbons dashed across the Pacific in the same steamship with Will Rogers, off on a jaunt 'round the world. The International News Service completed arrangements by wireless for Gibbons to be received, as soon as he could motor from Tokyo to Yokohama, by the Japanese premier and the Japanese minister of war.

The veteran war correspondent literally "cleaned up" in the Manchurian phase of the Japanese operations. His experience and ability won him the respect of General Honjo and his staff. He was given all facilities to visit every theatre of action.

He visited the various Chinese organizations, General Ma's army and the irregular formations, some practically bandit forces, harrying the invading troops.

Scenting the coming shift in operations, he flew down to Port Arthur, constructed by the Tsar prior to 1905 as a Pacific naval base and eastern terminus of the trans-Siberian Railway. He started for Shanghai.

Japanese naval forces, steaming under forced draught on their secret mission to Shanghai, arrived at the Whangpoo only a couple of hours before Gibbons.

Covering the Shanghai operations, Gibbons has "mopped up" in impressive style. His eye witness stories of the menace to the international settlement, of the seething panic in the Chinese quarters, of the dreadful carnage from shells and bombs in the flimsy built suburb of Chapel, and finally of the assaults on the Woosung forts, are classic examples of the art of journalism, the nice dovetailing of complete, accurate news with graphic descriptive and keen human interest.

No other newspaper correspondent's despatches have approached those of Gibbons in clarity, in vivid color, the wealth of detail. And his message on the general situation, his analysis of the strategy employed, and the tactics used, his forecast of future phases of the operations, have been unequalled.
